

Self Assignment 1

One of the important questions in your journey to becoming a photographer is to consider the following:

‘Why do you photograph?’

In order to assist you in answering this question, take a moment to think back to what was your first love as a child? Was it dancing or drawing or something else?

Once you have identified this, then ask yourself how have you managed to integrate this first love into your life or have you diverged from it. How important is this to you?

Another question to help you answer the question as to ‘why you photograph’ is to ask yourself, what do you daydream about? And once again, after you have recalled your daydreams, then ask yourself how have you managed to integrate your daydreams into your life or have you diverged from it. How important is this to you?

Once you have reflected on this question and feel comfortable with your answer then try the following self-assignment.

Proceed to go out and with a roll of film or a digital camera and take a series of photographs that reflect this newfound perspective.

Are your new images different for your usual style, perspective or way of working.
